To Whom It May Concern:

From December of 2006 to September of 2007 I was an intern for College Works Painting. The internship includes almost all of the facets and responsibilities of somebody who is starting their own business. I worked very closely with Johnny Rhee (VP) and Jared Ryan (Co-VP) who provided all of the necessary knowledge and materials to advertise and run my business.

Throughout the course of the internship, I had numerous training sessions with Johnny Rhee and Jared Ryan along with all of the other interns. It was easy to follow and respect my two employers because of how organized the training sessions were, how well they conveyed the subject matter, and their tremendous efforts to introduce us to other successful entrepreneurs who shared their advice and motivated us to be better than above average.

Moreover, College Works Painting is a business based off of incentive. I cannot express my gratitude enough to say that I learned the true meaning of this. There are many competitions throughout the internship to encourage those who want to be the best and better themselves. I humbly say that I won many of these competitions because of my strength through Christ, perseverance, and the encouragement to be better than I ever thought I could be. With this being said, I enjoyed the cash bonuses, nice dinners, and respect.

After completing this internship, I can say that I successfully ran a $110,000 business, gained numerous reference letters, and was the #1 Quality Manager in not only my division, but in the Nation.

It is not in my character to ever tell somebody to give up, to not try, or to not push themselves. In order to be successful, one must have the necessary tools that it takes to be successful. From my experiences through College Works Painting and the phenomenal mentorship of Johnny Rhee and Jared Ryan, I can confidently say I have gained many of these tools in order to have faith in myself to be successful someday.

Sincerely,

Brandon Coursey
